

GIVING

... to promote law school reform

Jack Bovay and wife, Leslie, established a book award for his Advising the Entrepreneur class.

“Those whom we honored with this award taught us to give back to our community, with both time and treasure, and this gift and the class are a small effort to do so,” said Bovay, an adjunct professor at UF Law.

Bovay said the class is just a small part of a nationwide trend to revamp the third-year law school curriculum. He said it exposes third-year students to what an office practice is like. Bovay, a shareholder in the Gainesville office of the Dean Mead law firm, is board certified in both tax law and wills, and trusts and estates.

... agronomists and scientists a legal education

Michael Minton said he and his wife pledged $100,000 toward the Michael D. Minton and Mary P. Minton Scholarship in Law to assist students graduating from the UF College of Agricultural and Life Sciences who want to pursue a law degree, and if desired, their LL.M. in Taxation.

“It’s important to give back to students who come from within the agriculture industry,” said Minton, who serves as the chair of Dean Mead’s Agribusiness Industry Team. “We want to enhance the breadth of experience these young people receive by giving them the opportunity to attend law school and achieve a well-rounded education.”
